Aim of the series

This series offers a multi-disciplinary perspective on exploring childhood and youth as social phenomena that are culturally located, articulating children's and young people's perspectives on their everyday lives. The aim of the series will be to continue to develop these theoretical perspectives through publishing both monographs and edited collections that present cutting-edge research within the area of childhood studies. It will provide a key locus for work within the field that is currently published across a diverse range of outlets and will help consolidate and develop childhood studies as a discrete field of scholarship.

Acknowledgements

This book has been a number of years in its development. Along the way I have been very grateful for the support of many people whose help has been a staging post in finding ways to express the ideas that I felt so passionate about sharing. Thanks to Kate Bacon for the long conversations that saw the emergence of the framework of this book. It is a framework, however, that has only taken on real meaning during my time at King's University College, Western University, Ontario. I want to thank Alan Pomfret for the freedom to explore my ideas and for the opportunity to be part of a dialogue with him, Pat Ryan and other scholars that certainly informed this work. I want to say a special thank you to a wonderful group of students who patiently let me test out my ideas on them. Thank you for the blank faces and for letting me know when it didn't make sense, but most of all for your encouragement that these ideas are of value to people like you, who are ambitious about drawing off childhood studies to make a difference in the world.

Thank you to the team at Palgrave Macmillan for their patience and encouragement. As always, I am grateful to Allison and Adrian James for their words of wisdom and ongoing inspiration.

This book would not be what it is without the input of Sally McNamee, her friendship, encouragement, counsel and spell checking has been invaluable.

I would also like to express my thanks to friends and family: to Terry and Gill Over whose support has given me opportunities like this, as well as to both sets of parents. Finally to those who have had to put up with the day-to-day reality of me trying to write – to Ruari, Rosie, Maria and most of all Moira – thank you.
